3. Regarding claim 1:

- a. Regarding the limitation of "providing within said integrated circuit a test port linking circuit having a register for receiving a first portion of said serial instruction frame," Mack discloses a system with a JTAG port capable of receiving instruction frames. (Lines 10-13 of Column 2).

- b. Regarding the limitation of "providing within said integrated circuit a test port circuit having a register for receiving a second portion of said serial instruction frame," Mack discloses a system with a JTAG port for receiving disable bit. (Lines 15-18 of Column 2).

- c. Regarding the limitation of "transmitting the serial instruction frame to said registers of said test port linking and test port circuits," Mack discloses a system with a JTAG capable of receiving instructions on the TAP from a user. (Lines 15-18 of Column 4).

- d. Regarding the limitation of “responding to the instruction frame portion transmitted into the register of the test port linking circuit to disable further transmission of instruction frames into said test port circuit,” Mack discloses a system with a disable bit that when programmed, disables the JTAG. (Lines 15-18 of Column 2 and Lines 28-32 of Column 4).
- 4. Regarding claim 2:

 - f. Regarding the limitation of “providing within said integrated circuit a test port circuit,” Mack discloses a system with a JTAG and a TAP port. (Lines 15-18 of Column 4).
 - g. Regarding the limitation of “transmitting said serial instruction frame to said registers of said test port linking and test port circuits,” Mack discloses a system with a JTAG capable of receiving instructions on the TAP from a user. (Lines 15-18 of Column 4).
 - h. Regarding the limitation of “responding to the instruction frame transmitted into the register of the test port linking circuit to enable further transmission of further instruction frames into said test port circuit,” Mack discloses a system wherein if the disable bit is a logic zero, test port circuit remains active to receive test commands. (Lines 15-28 of Column 4).
